THE MOUNTAIN

You are staring into the great abyss at a wall that keeps a major issue from being seen.
To understand how to get over the wall you have to understand the importance of the wall's structure and what aspects exist for a reason.

What does that wall look like?

Why does the wall exist?

What is the issue the existence of the wall is causing?

THE WIND

Scaling the wall makes you stand out. You have to blow it over with your words.

The structure of The United States of America has a ton of layers to it so that it is hard for people to play culture wars in. We are all required to give information that says we are right in order to change group behavior. Using documents to shape behavior not only keeps protections in place during conflict, but it also helps us memorize the steps. If we lost all writing tomorrow we would still already have memorized working together.

Words are the anchor of America because words help us all learn to come together.

What are the words that describe your passions:

What are you watching out for in this world, that you wish other people would notice more:

What direct information can you give about the subjects you are passionate about to shape the policies and national behaviors we have around these topics?

THE ROCK

As we gather and stare into the great abyss as a nation of all people working together we get to help other places talk about their passions better. By being patient and kind when disagreeing we give everyone an opportunity to be right. If the US allowed people to harm others to make points we would be allowing people to make cultures look bad, and that could cause wars (which is unethical). Your words are your rock. Be wise.

Why are you right ? (Also take time to check how are you wrong.)

How are they wrong?

What measurable documentation do you have to prove that?

THE STORM

Summarize your findings in no more than one page with facts that support your stance. Read your writing several times to make sure you have most emotion out. Emotion within writing often keeps the reader from understanding your points because it causes them to disconnect from the points you are making if they do not feel the same emotion as you.

You do you:
